ABSTRACT

This report provides results from the Fall 1999 Department of Criminal Justice Service Survey of Virginia School Resource Officer (SRO) Programs. Through this study, all Virginia police departments and sheriff's offices with primary responsibility for patrol, crime prevention, and community policing within their jurisdictions were contacted by telephone. If a department or office sponsored a SRO program, the survey staff asked to speak to the person most knowledgeable about the program. This agency contact person was then asked for the following: law enforcement agency's name; agency telephone number; SRO supervisor's name and telephone number; years the agency SRO program has operated; and number of agency SRO positions. The following were asked about each SRO: rank, last name, first name; years/months as an SRO; years/months in law enforcement; level of formal SRO training; and current school assignment. Findings show that there are 129 local SRO programs in Virginia. Thirty-one of 40 Virginia cities have SRO programs; 76 of 95 Virginia counties have SRO programs; 22 of 192 Virginia towns have SRO programs; and a total of 128 Virginia localities have SRO programs. Eleven tables provide specific data gathered from this study. (MKA)

BACKGROUND

Recent Increase in Grant-Funded SRO Programs

The school shootings of 1998 and early 1999 made school violence a public concern and lead Governor Jim Gilmore and the Virginia General Assembly to provide more grant money for the hiring of School Resource Officers (SRO). Consequently, between July 1, 1998, and July 1, 1999, the number of SRO grants administered by the Virginia Department of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS) increased from 24 to 111 and the number of SRO positions funded by these grants rose from 32 to 122. Most of these positions helped establish new SRO programs or expand programs less than three years old. The value of the state and federal money underwriting these grants rose from $730,000 to $2,315,000.

The Virginia Model SRO Program

As more SRO programs were created, staff of the Virginia Governor's Office and the DCJS Crime Prevention Center (CPC) worked to develop model SRO policies and procedures and other program resources. Among the staff's initial products were the Juvenile Law Handbook (a synopsis of juvenile law intended for school administrators) and the School Resource Officer Resource Handbook (information on community policing in schools, SRO roles, the school environment, crime prevention through environmental design (CPTED) principles, model policies and procedures, etc.).

Other staff work was directed at increasing the skills and abilities of SROs. A complete overhaul of the Basic SRO School curricula was undertaken, experienced SROs and special topic experts were recruited as instructors, and the schedule of school and workshop offerings greatly expanded. Curricula were also created and implemented for special workshops on school crisis planning, management of school incidents, drug awareness, and legal issues affecting law enforcement in schools. These initiatives are advancing the professional stature of Virginia's SROs and helping to institutionalize SRO programming across the Commonwealth.

Another significant contribution to SRO programming was the creation of a system of SRO program evaluation. Implemented in the spring of 1999, the system garners information about school-based crime, issues effecting program implementation and operation, and day-to-day activities of SROs. The first analysis of system data is presented in Evaluation of Grant-Funded SRO Programs, DCJS Crime Prevention Center, March 2000. The data is also used to inform SROs and school administrators about the type, extent, and location of crime in the schools served by the SROs and about the level of concern that students and staff have about school safety.

Finally, grant guidelines were issued that encouraged the adoption of the "Virginia Model" of SRO programming. The components of this model are as follows:

- SRO programs must reflect "a community-oriented policing philosophy,"
- All persons hired as SROs must be "certified, sworn, law enforcement officers,"
- Officers hired must have community experience which "demonstrates their interest and ability to work with youth, school personnel, and the public to solve problems."
- SROs must perform multiple roles including those of law enforcer, instructor of law-related education classes, criminal justice liaison, role model, and crime prevention specialist,
- SROs must complete a 40-hour, DCJS sponsored SRO Basic School, and
- SROs must be assigned to a single, specified secondary school. Assignment to two schools is permitted if the schools are in close physical proximity.

The model also incorporates the described resources and evaluation system and, in sum, constitutes a unique, state-level infrastructure for improving the operational effectiveness of locally based SRO programs.

Locality-Funded SRO Programs

It is important to note, however, that 48 of Virginia's 129 local SRO programs are not administered or monitored by DCJS staff. These programs, some of which are the oldest programs, are funded by local revenues or federal monies from locally initiated grants. The number and size of these programs was unknown until the Governor's Office conducted a phone survey of Sheriff's Offices and Police Departments in January 1999. The survey identified 351 SRO positions and provided information on SRO training and SRO school assignments. Data from the survey has not been published.

Rationale for the DCJS Survey

The growth of SRO programming and continuance of school shootings stimulated citizen and governmental interest in SRO programming and increased the number of questions being asked about it. To answer these questions and update the data collected by the Governor's Office, CPC managers authorized a second survey of Virginia SRO programs. The survey was conducted by CPC staff during December 1999 and January 2000.

SURVEY METHODOLOGY

All Virginia police departments and sheriff's offices with primary responsibility for patrol, crime prevention, and community policing within their jurisdictions were contacted by telephone. If a department or office sponsored a SRO program, CPC staff asked to speak to the person most knowledgeable about the program. This "agency contact" person was then asked for the following information:

Program Data

- Law enforcement agency's name
- Agency telephone number
- SRO supervisor's name and telephone number
- Years agency SRO program has operated
- Number of agency SRO positions

SRO Data

- Rank, first name, last name
- Years/months as a SRO Officer
- Years/months in law enforcement
- Any formal SRO training?
- Current school assignment(s)

SURVEY FINDINGS

Facts about SRO Programs

As of March 1, 2000, there were 129 local SRO programs in Virginia.

- 31 of 40 Virginia cities had SRO programs
- 76 of 95 Virginia counties had SRO programs.
- 22 of 192 Virginia towns had SRO programs.[1]

128[2] = Total number of Virginia localities with SRO Programs.

---

[1] When the 22 town programs are counted as county programs, the total number of counties with SRO programs increases by 5 to 81.

[2] The total does not equal 129 because one locality has two separate programs. Both the Roanoke City Police Department and Roanoke City Sheriff's Office have SRO programs.
